Heart rate variability and school readiness by Kern-Jerasick test were determined in mono- and bilingual children. Bilinguals in the beginning of school year had better adaptational reserve than monolingual fellows. High school readiness correlates with higher adaptational reserve determined by PARS. CONCLUSION: Timely adequate preparation to school is necessary to provide easier adaptation and reduction of stress to physiological norm.

PubMed ID: 18763583 View in PubMed